Lawrence Tech ramps up online classes

Taking classes online is becoming increasingly popular at Lawrence Technological University. About 250 students are enrolled in 23 courses for the spring semester through LTU Online, and many more are expected to make the switch from traditional classroom instruction in the near future.

Currently three graduate certificate programs in project management, nonprofit management and architectural management are available entirely online.

For more information about taking online courses at Lawrence Technological University, contact Al McCord at mccord@ltu.edu or (248) 204-3094 or click here.

Automation Alley News

2007 Annual Meeting

Attend Automation Alley's 2007 Annual Meeting to hear the accomplishments of 2006, the organization's goals for the future and how Automation Alley continues to successfully brand the region as a center for technology. During the meeting, Alley directors will provide an account of the progress of government affairs, all business lines, and communications and events.

In addition, the 2006 Annual Report will be distributed. Highlights include a membership update, the addition of the Southeast Michigan Information Security Regional Skills Alliance, and the Second Annual Technology Industry Report.

This year's meeting will be January 30, 2007 at the Troy Marriott from 7:30-9:30 a.m. Voting members will also have the opportunity to vote on the 2007 Automation Alley Board of Directors. There is no cost to attend. Click here to register or for more information.
